

Justin Henry

(201) 471-1253 | Justin.Henry0024@gmail.com
github.com/massiahtheruler | linkedin.com/in/justin-frontend

May 13, 2026

Ramp Hiring Team

Dear Ramp Hiring Team,

I am drawn to Ramp because the company clearly values builders who move quickly, think independently, and care about solving real operational problems through product and engineering. The emphasis on ownership, urgency, and execution matches how I naturally approach my work.

My background combines frontend engineering, product thinking, branding, and user experience. That mix has shaped the way I build systems and interfaces. I care about creating frontend experiences that are not only visually polished, but also performant, intuitive, scalable, and tightly connected to real business outcomes. A large part of the work I enjoy most is translating complex workflows and product ideas into clean, usable systems that people can rely on every day.

What stands out to me most about Ramp is the focus on building infrastructure that directly affects how businesses operate at scale. I am motivated by environments where engineering decisions have meaningful downstream impact and where speed, clarity, and product quality matter at the same time. That combination of technical complexity, ownership, and product impact is exactly the kind of environment I want to contribute to.

I also strongly relate to the idea of valuing slope over intercept. Much of my growth as a developer has come through hands-on building, shipping projects, learning quickly, and sharpening both technical and product instincts through execution. I like operating in fast-moving environments where I can contribute across frontend architecture, UX quality, systems thinking, and implementation details without losing sight of the overall customer experience.

More than anything, I am excited by the opportunity to help build products that feel seamless, trustworthy, and highly functional under real-world scale and pressure. The intersection of frontend engineering, product ownership, performance, and thoughtful user experience is where I believe I bring the most value, and I would be excited to bring that energy to Ramp.

Sincerely,

Justin Henry